WEDDING CARDS, POSTERS, VISITING CARDS, HANDBILLS, BUSINESS CARDS, PROGRAMMES, BALL CARDS, BILLHEADS, FANCY SHOW CARDS, DODGERS, BILLS OF FARE, STATEMENTS, WINE CARDS, PAMPHLETS, LAW CASES AND CIRCULARS, POINTS, BOOKS, ETC.

In the latest and neatest styles, and at the lowest prices. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

The year 1889 will go down into history as an unprecedented season of storms, flood, and disaster in the United States.

In the course of recent excavations in the Nile valley, inscriptions in Cypriote or Old World Greek characters have been discovered. As some of these inscriptions date at least as far back as 2000 B. C. it seems to follow that the Homeric poems might have been committed to writing by Algean Greeks at the supposed date of their composition.

At last the government of India has been moved to activity on the question of the segregation of lepers. It is proposed to give the district magistrates power to order the arrest of any leper who is found begging or wandering about without any means of subsistence. Such lepers will be detained in retreat for life, and provision will be made for the segregation of the sexes.

A satisfactory private trial of the pneumatic guns of the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius was made recently. The story doesn't take long in the telling, but, in the opinion of the New York Herald, it contains a moral that will be heard even above the thunderous salutes of the recent British naval review at Spithead. There are sanguine officers who can hear it say, "The big ironclad must go."

The latest trust has been formed in North Dakota. Its objects are horse-stealing on new and improved principles which do not bring the perpetrators within reach of Judge Lynch. The scheme is to stake out some old, used-up horses as decoys and in this way gather a fine bunch of animals, drive them a few hundred miles and dispose of them to strangers. It is a pretty plan, but the horse-breeders and cow boys of Dakota may be counted on to soon get the bearings of these frauds.

"The progress that electricity has made in this country is wonderful," said an expert electrician. "There are now in use in the United States more than 5650 central electric stations for light and power. There are 210,000 arc lights and 2,600,000 incandescent lamps. There were 59 electrical railways in operation up to July 1, and at present there are 86 additional roads in process of construction. The increase of capital in electrical investments during the year 1888 was nearly $70,000,000."

The Historical Society in Pennsylvania possesses an authentic list in manuscript of the French officers who came to the aid of the Americans during the revolutionary war. Among them was the Vicomte de Fontanges, major-general at the siege of Savannah, who commanded a legion of colored troops from St. Domingo. Their officers were Captains Andre, Rigaud, Beauvais and Beauregard, all men of color, who afterward became generals under the republic, and also Henry Christophe, who later was King of Hayti.

The journey around the Congo cataracts, which now takes between three and four weeks, will be made in two days by the trains of the Congo railroad, which is now in course of construction. The locomotives will weigh 30 tons each, and the speed at first will be about 11 miles per hour. Trains will be run only during daylight. There will be three intermediate stations on the 225 miles of track. The railroad is expected to pay expenses from the start, as the outlay for carrier service over its route already exceeds $150,000 a year.

The men who write the songs that appeal to the people generally have strange histories. John Howard Payne is perhaps, the best example—a man who hardly knew what domestic life was, yet writing the song which appeals most strongly to the home instincts. A song almost equally popular is "There is a happy land, far, far away." The author is Andrew Young, who is still alive, though past eighty. He wrote the words to accompany an old Indian air, and though song publishers have made fortunes out of his work, he never received a penny for it.

The rush of European laborers to Brazil, which began immediately after the abolition of slavery by Dom Pedro, is still maintained in such proportions as to command the serious consideration of statesmen and social economists in the countries affected. Italians have been thronging into Brazil at the rate of 50,000 a month. English and Irish working folk have for the past six months been making their way thither in frequent parties of from 1000 to 1500 each. The Germans are now taking their innings, and are not only settling there numerously, but are driving all competitors out of the field in the import trade. All this state of affairs has been fostered and stimulated by Government appropriations "for encouraging immigration," amounting this year to some $6,000,000. The effect is seen in the opening of banks, the building already of nearly a thousand miles of new railroads, the development of commerce and other industries, and such a general promotion of public interests as never was dreamed of in the old days.

Rake Clean.

Quoth Ralph to his father, the farmer,
"Such hay there never was seen.
How shall we care for it, father?"
Said the father, "My son, rake clean,
Rake clean, rake clean;
We have need of it all, I ween."

"But the cows have not space enough, father,
To hold such abundance between
The floor and the comb of the building."
Quoth the farmer, "My son, rake clean,
Rake clean, rake clean;
We can care for it all, I ween."

Then the seasons flew by (and the harvest
Good service that winter had been),
And again in the field were the toilers;
And still said the farmer: "Rake clean,
Rake clean, rake clean;
We have need of it all, I ween."

But the lad gazed distressfully round him;
"Less hay," said he, "never was seen.
The cattle will surely be stinted."
Quoth the farmer, "My son, rake clean,
Rake clean, rake clean;
We shall find there's sufficient, I ween."

ALICE'S PACKAGE.

"Good morning!" said the new station agent.

"Good morning!" said Alice.

They had parted at 11 o'clock last night, having strolled home from the concert together, and they had found enough to talk about then. But here, under the bantering gaze of the ex-station agent, who haunted the scene of his former labors previous to his departure for Iowa they were tongue-tied.

"Is there a package for me?" said Alice, formally.

"I'll see," said Cary Loomis, exploring with alacrity.

But Mr. Stark dived into a corner before him, bringing forth a large, square bundle.

"This it?" said he. There was a twinkle in his eye. "'Miss Alice Lyman.' Paid, too. But, see here, now—'Pittsburg!' Who's sending you presents from Pittsburg, Ally?" His twinkle was luminous.

"It's not a present," Alice retorted. But the ex-agent was not satisfied.

"Pittsburg," he mused. "Seems to me that surveyor fellow hailed from Pittsburg, didn't he, Ally?'

"Shall I sign here?' said Alice to Cary Loomis over the entry book.

"And boarding next door, too," said Mr. Stark, "w-y, yes—it's natural—natural!"

"Oh, no, it isn't heavy, thank you! Why, lift it," Alice was saying to Cary, with a laughing frown for her tormentor.

"Good-looking fellow too," said Mr. Stark. "Wal, Ally, you've got my consent for one."

"Thank you!" Alice laughed, but vexedly.

She had meant to say something to Cary Loomis over and beyond the conversation about the package—for had not the pleasant young new station agent seemed already quite attentive to her?—but now she could not summon a word or syllable. If Mr. Stark were at the bottom of the sea!

"I don't know how Pittsburgh 'ill suit you, Ally," Mr. Stark persisted, mercilessly. "They say it's smoky. But I s'pose smoke won't interfere——"

Alice was gone, and Cary closed the ledger with a bang.

"Were you joking, Stark," he demanded, "or is that so?"

Stark eyed him. He had a strong sense of humor, and he read the new agent's secret.

Without absolute statements, he convinced his young successor that Alice Lyman had flirted outrageously with the Pittsburgh surveyor; that he had been most devoted; that they were undoubtedly engaged, and that the big package from Pittsburg was proof of it.

Cary had grown a little pale during the process, but so strong was Mr. Stark's humorous sense that he strolled away finally with a widened grin.

Cary found his dinner saved warm for him when he went up to his boarding-house somewhat late, and Mrs. Davis, large and cheerful, waiting to serve it to him.

But today neither his dinner nor Mrs. Davis cheered him. He ate one and responded to the other glumly.

"Well, now; maybe you ain't feeling just smart. I've known change of air and water to make folks real sick," she hazarded in concern.

"Oh, I'm all right," said Cary, sardonically smiling.

"Maybe you need livening up. You've been to the sociables and concerts, to be sure; but may be something livelier—Well, there," she broke off with motherly interest, "there's the music in the park tonight; I guess you'll like to hear that. You better step over tonight," said his landlady inspiritingly.

He had no intention of going. He decided, with a certain melancholy satisfaction, that he would spend the evening in his room, and without a light; that would be the fitting situation for him and his dejection. She would be in the park, and perhaps the Pittsburg surveyor would follow his package, and be there with her.

All the same, for such is the power of pretty eyes and red lips, eight o'clock found him in the park. He would not go near Alice Lyman. He strolled about gloomily. All the town appeared to have assembled. The band was, one by one, mounting to the band stand.

"Oh, Mr. Loomis!' somebody exclaimed with a pretty laugh, "I had almost run over to you!"

It was Alice—Alice with a loose knot of young men and maidens, not yet paired off, but well connected.

He joined them, of course; there was no other way.

And a few minutes later, when they had paired off, and the band had struck up, he found himself on a bench beside her—they two alone.

"Home, Sweet Home!" said Alice. "Dear me, Mr. Loomis, couldn't they have found something a little newer?"

"It seems not," said Cary, unsmilingly.

"But how they flat!" cried Alice, clasping her ears. "And that second horn is a bar behind."

She was in a gay mood. Her derisive words were mirthful.

"And they've been practising all the spring. Well, I could do better with a comb and some tissue paper."

A whiff from the syringa she wore was wafted to him.

Her face, in the dusky light, was bright and yet soft.

She was thinking about her surveyor, probably, and laughing in her sleeve at him. Well, let her.

Poor Cary felt suddenly weary of his anger. He was in love with a pretty girl who did not love him—that was all. She could not be blamed—he would not blame her. He could hate the man she did care for, but he could not hate her.

So, while the band labored unmusically on, he bent toward and talked to her gently.

He told her of the really fine open air concerts he had heard at Brighton Beach. He described the odd, varying scene—the mass of people who thronged the walks; the long, crowded hotel piazzas; the circular pavilion from which the music poured forth; and bounding it all, the great still water.

He found Alice looking up at him, as he ended, with a keenness in her eyes and a softer smile.

"I have never been anywhere," she said, almost in a whisper. "I don't know anything. I wonder, Mr. Loomis—I've wondered more than once—that you care to talk to me! I——"

But she said more than she meant to. He knew that her cheeks were hot and her eyes confusedly lowered.

His heart throbbed hard. He got up abruptly.

"That remarkable march they're murdering is driving everybody away," he remarked. "Shall we follow, Miss Lyman?"

"I think so," said Alice.

Her fingers pressed his offered arm.

A man, who had been listening in his halted buggy, wheeled about as they stepped into the road.

He was driving a colt, and a frisky one.

Was it the marvellously bad music which made the horse jump as he turned?

Alice was on the point of asserting it, but he swerved so close that she sprang back with a scream.

Somehow the whirling buggy struck her. It flew down the road the next instant, but Alice lay in a prone heap in the dusty road.

Cary Loomis groaned as he bent over her.

"Alice!" he cried. "Alice, darling! are you hurt?'

He raised her to her feet, his arms about her.

"No, no!' she protested. "That back wheel struck me as it flew around—that's all; it didn't even bruise me. Only I'm dusty enough," she ended, laughing.

"I am so sorry!" he murmured. "You sprung away from me so quickly that I could not save you. You must be hurt."

"I haven't a scratch," she retorted. "I—I think I will take your arm, Mr. Loomis."

In a bewildered way he withdrew and offered it. Then:

"I owe you an apology, Miss Lyman," he said, stiffly, as they went. "I—I called you something. I was so startled that I called you—perhaps you did not hear me?"

"Yes, I did," she murmured, with head averted.

"Well," he burst forth, desperately, "an apology, did I say? Well, I apologize, Miss Lyman. But I only said what was in my heart—I only said what I couldn't help, Miss Lyman. Try not to blame me! You will have a right to tell the man you are promised to, if you choose, and he will have the right to horsewhip me—but I couldn't help it! Try to forget it!'

"I don't understand you," said Alice, turning toward him at last and squarely. "What can you mean, Mr. Loomis? The man I'm promised to? I'm promised to nobody!"

But she was promised to somebody soon and in short order.

* * * * *

"Stark," said Cary—he was too happy to be sharply discerning and he regarded Mr. Stark with bland eyes—" Stark, you were wrong, let me inform you about Miss Lyman and that surveyor from Pittsburg who boarded next door to her. She is not engaged to him. She never was, Stark, and never will be!"

"Sho, now!" Mr. Stark's long countenance beamed forth and almost infantile blankness.

"Wal, I'm beat!'

"He was fifty or so, Stark, and Alice hardly exchanged a dozen words with him."

"Now pshaw!" said Mr. Stark, with a wide gaze of incredulity.

"No, sir, not a dozen words! And that package—he was going to Pittsburg, you know, and he heard her telling the lady he boarded with that she wanted a lot of worsteds, and some she couldn't get here, and he offered to get them for her when he got home. And he did. That's what that package was, Stark."

"Wal," said Mr. Stark, stroking his stubbly chin, "how I got it into my noddle I dunno—don't for the life of me! I hain't been so took back, I dunno when!"

But he coughed queerly as he walked away.

Mr. Stark's sense of humor was abnormally developed.—Saturday Night.

New Way to Make Sugar.

The first lignite sugar refinery in this country is about to be put into operation, and if it carries out the expectations of its projectors, it may revolutionize the sugar industries of the world. The Keystone Sugar Refining Company has established a plant at Riverside, Del., on the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad, just this side of Wilmington, and in a few days the machinery will be put in motion. The scheme is to utilize the waste from the molasses-houses known as "black strap" and turn out an excellent grade of sugar.

The process is the invention of a man named Kleeman, a German, who has superintended the erection of the machinery at the Riverside refinery. He has one or two large refineries in Germany, which at present are the only ones in the world. The "black strap" is thrown into a reservoir and thinned with water and then large quantities of pulverized lignite are thrown in and mixed with the refuse molasses. The process of purifying them takes place, and after passing through a sort of press the lignite and sugar are separated, the lignite being turned out in blocks, which can be used as fuel. By this means there is absolutely no waste.

The lignite is a sort of coal and the company at present is receiving a supply from Germany, although it is found in large quantities in this country. In Vermont and Alabama there are great fields of it and deposits of it are found in New Jersey, but there it is of an inferior quality.

The "black strap" is to be secured from molasses houses. It has always been a problem puzzling the refiners to find some way of using this waste, but it never was solved until Mr. Kleeman invented his process. The "black strap" formerly was shipped to Europe, where it was used for coloring cordials, making rum and for other purposes, but the product has always been in excess of the demand.—New York Journal.

Antics of a Lemur.

No beast that I ever saw was more fond of play than the little Malagasy, not even a lively kitten. From the moment his door was opened till he was shut in for the night he often gave his mind to a constant succession of pranks. He scraped the beads off our dress-trimmings with his comb-like teeth, and he slapped or pulled books or work out of our hands, and especially liked to frolic in one's lap, lying on his back kicking with all fours, pretending to bite, and turning somersaults or indulging in the most peculiar leaps. In the latter he flung out his arms, dropped his head on one side in a bewitching way, turned half around in the air, and came down in the spot he started from, the whole performance so sudden, apparently so involuntary, and his face so grave all the time, it seemed as if a spring had gone off inside, with which his will had nothing to do.

A favorite plaything with the lemur was a window-shade. He began by jumping up to the fringe, seizing it and swinging back and forth. One day he learned by accident that he could "set it off," and then his extreme pleasure was to snatch at it with so much force as to start the spring, when he instantly let go and made one bound fo the other side of the room, or to the mantel, where he sat, looking the picture of innocence, while the released shade sprang to the top and went over and over the rod. We could never prevent his carrying out this little programme, and we drew down one shade only to have him slyly set off another the next instant.

A Very Old Lady.

When commanding in East Tennesseo an invitation to dinner was extended to General Burnside by an elderly farmer. The invitation was accepted. At the table sat the mother of the host, a lively old lady, but in appearance extremely old. "Mother," said the General, "may I ask your age? You appear to be quite old for a person who can get around as lively as you do." She replied: "Yes, my son, I am very old. I have lived here all my life. I don't know adzackly how old I am, but I know that I am a little over a thousand years old."

WIZARD EDISON.

He Talks of Inventions He Will Some Day Bring Out

To Reproduce Images a Thousand Feet Distant.

While Mr. Edison, the great inventor, was in Paris he was interviewed by a reporter of the Courier des Etats Unis, a French paper published in New York City.

The reporter asked Mr. Edison if it was true that he had invented a machine by the aid of which a man in New York would be able to see everything that his wife was doing in Paris.

"I don't know," said Mr. Edison, laughing, "that that would be a real benefit to humanity. The women certainly would protest. But, speaking seriously, I am at work on an invention which will allow a man in Wall street not only to telephone to a friend in the Central Park, but to see that friend while he is chatting telephonically with him. This invention would be useful and practical, and I see no reason why it should not soon become a reality, and one of the first things that I shall do when I get back to America will be to set up this contrivance between my laboratory and my telephone workshops. Moreover, I have already obtained satisfactory results in reproducing images at that distance, which is only about 1000 feet. It would be ridiculous to dream of seeing any one between New York and Paris. The round form of the earth, if there were no other difficulty in the way, would make the thing impossible."

Speaking of the phonograph, the reporter asked if it had reached its highest degree of perfection.

"Almost, I think," said Mr. Edison, "in the last instruments turned out of my workshops. You must know that the ordinary phonograph employed in commerce does not compare with the latest machines that I use in my private experiments. With the latter I can obtain a sound powerful enough to reproduce phrases of a speech that can be heard perfectly by a large audience. My last ameliorations were the aspirate sounds, which are the weak points of the graphophone. For seven months I worked from eighteen to twenty hours a day upon a single sound 'specia.' I would say to the instrument 'specia,' and it would always say 'pecia,' and I couldn't make it say anything else. It was enough to make me crazy. But I stuck to it until I succeeded, and now you can read a thousand words of a newspaper at the rate of 150 words a minute, and the instrument will repeat them to you without an omission. You can imagine the difficulty of the task that I accomplished when I tell you that the impressions made upon the cylinder are not more than one millionth part of an inch in depth, and are completely invisible even with the aid of a microscope."

Reporter—And what new discoveries will be made in electricity?

Mr. Edison—Ah, that would be difficult to say. We may some day come upon one of the great secrets of nature. I am always on the lookout for something which will help me to solve the problem of navigating the air. I have worked hard upon this subject, but I am very much discouraged. We may find something new before that comes; but that will come.

Mr. Edison further said that the great development of electricity will come when we find a more economical method of producing it. During his trip across the ocean he remained for hours on deck looking at the waves, and he says that it made him wild when he saw so much force going to waste. "But one of these days," he continued, "we will chain all that—the falls of Niagara as well as the winds—and that will be the millennium of electricity."

A Successful Inventor.

One of the most successful inventors of what somebody has inaccurately described as "unconsidered trifles," is that small and even insignificant-looking man who seems to be gazing with some show of interest at the chewing-gum box in a down-town "L" road station. His name is Adams, and two years ago, his neighbors in Brooklyn now recall with admiring awe, he was "broke." Now he has an income of many thousands, and his profits have enabled him to buy, within six months, a Brooklyn real estate dealer says, at least $50,000 worth of city lots. Young Adams attends to the chewing-gum business, while the elder, who conceived the idea of putting it up in one-cent packages, and allowing it to issue, for a consideration, from a slot machine, has won the right, at last, to enjoy life, and does so accordingly. Some Brooklyn people think the Adamses can take any kind of tree gum, maple or what not, and turn it into gold.—New York World.

Knowledge Costs Money.

Irate Patron—"See here, sir. I dropped a nickel into this machine and nothing came out."

Agent—"If nothing came out, that shows it's empty."

"But sir, what do I get for my nickel?'

Working His Way.

A writer in the Boston Transcript tells us of a young man who is likely to make his way in the world: "Spending a Sunday recently with a friend in a delightful summer resort, we happened to be sitting on the veranda as a milkman's wagon drove up. The milkman, a sturdy young fellow of pleasant face, dismounted, rang a bell by way of warning to the maids of the vicinity to get their pitchers ready, and then started around with his cans and his pint measure. As he passed around to the back door of the cottage our friend saluted him as one gentleman salutes another, and when the milkman had gone the other said:

"That young man is a member of the class of '90 at Harvard College."

"Indeed?"

"Yes. He is carrying himself through entirely by his own exertions, and he takes this way of helping himself out. I dare say he makes enough money selling milk at a good figure to the people here in the summer time to pay the greater part of his expenses for the remainder of the year at Cambridge."

"Does he water his milk?"

"Not perceptibly. It is very good milk, and I have no doubt he is as honest as the business allows."

A young man in the house who belongs to the class below the milkman's in the college testified to the excellent standing of the young man at Harvard.

Foolish Birds.

There are silly birds as well as silly people. The Demoiselle Crane, of Africa, sits first on one leg and then on the other, turns its head to one side and then to the other, dances a little dance all by itself, and then stands as still as a minister. It is a very vain, comical-acting bird. The Booby is more stupid and quite as silly. It sits on the seashore and shivers and shakes its head like an idiot. It will sit and be knocked over with a club rather than to make an effort to fly away. The Puffin belongs to the Auk family, and is not a very bright bird. Large numbers of these birds congregate in the crevices of the rocks in high latitudes. Travelers say they can capture them by letting down a rope, for the bird touched with it will grab it in his beak, and as it is lifted from the earth another bird will seize the first one's tail and another one that one's tail until a long string of them can be drawn from the abyss below.

The Albatross can also be caught with a line. Sailors bait hooks with salt pork and throw them into the sea. The Albatross swallow the bait, and rising in the air, is drawn in like a kite. The silly part of the performance is that when let go, the bird suffers itself to be caught again in the same manner.

Infants' Sensitive Eyes.

In an article on "Blindness and the Blind" in the Journal of the Franklin Institute, Dr. Webster Fox refers, among other things, to the need for care being exercised with regard to the eyes of young children. The eyes are more sensitive to light in childhood than in adult life, yet a mother or nurse will often expose the eyes of an infant to the glare of the sun for hours at a time.

Dr. Fox holds that serious evils may spring from this, and he even contends that "the greater number of the blind lose their sight from carelessness during infancy." From the point of view of an oculist he protests against the notion that children should begin to study at a very early age. He thinks that until they are between seven and nine years old the eye is not strong enough for school work. When they do begin to learn lessons they "should have good light during their study hours, and should not be allowed to study much by artificial light before the age of ten. Books printed in small type should never be allowed in the schoolrooms, much less be read by insufficient light."

The Curricle.

It is interesting to note the variety of carriages which are driven now in the large towns of America. That light and humane vehicle, the buggy, has almost disappeared from the fashionable drives. It was an easy-riding wagon, and the lightest of vehicles for a horse to draw. But it cannot be said that there is much comfort in the average buggy for a man of stalwart or heavy build. Dog-carts, buck-boards, gigs, mail phaetons, and the like have pushed the buggy to the wall. But, perhaps, the most recently imported of vehicles, and one which bids fair to retain a large degree of fashion is the curricle. This has two wheels, like a cart, but it also has a hood and a rumble behind for a servant, and two horses are driven to it with a pole. The buggy is hung on big "S" springs and drives very easily, and it is one of the most convenient vehicles for long drives in the country which has yet been designed. Besides, it has the indefinable but valuable stamp of fashion to recommend it to the world.

He Had None.

"I never speak to my inferiors," said Reginald de Brokaugh, haughtily.

"No," replied Smith, "I don't believe you ever do. Did you ever meet any?"

All up with them—Balloonists.

How Northwest Indians Catch Fish.

The Indians of the northwest coast, says the Washington Star, are all skillful fishermen. Many of them subsist almost entirely on fish and neglect agricultural pursuits. The sea, bays and rivers, teeming with fish, offer them always a rich harvest that can be easily reaped. The indolent and dirty Indians of the Quinaielt agency, Washington territory, are unusually expert in the use of nets and spears with which they capture salmon and smaller fish.

The drag-net is used for fishing in narrow streams of water. For using it two canoes are necessary, with strut from six to eight feet apart, with bows diverging. An Indian sits in the stern of each canoe, each Indian holding one pole of the net in one hand, while the other hand holds tight the string which keeps the mouth of the net open. The string always remains fastened to the pole, but when the Indian relaxes his hold on the string, as he does in hauling up the net, the mouth of the net closes, preventing the fish from escaping. The two canoes go up the river until 200 or 300 yards from the mouth; the net is then placed, and one Indian in each canoe paddles, while another throws stones to frighten the fish. Then they paddle down the river with the current into the narrow passage near the bar. Thus while catching salmon in the drag-net, as they proceed down stream, they are at the same time driving the fish toward other Indians who stand in the shallow water on the bar ready to spear them. The shaft of the salmon spear is made of cedar, the fork of the wood of the salmon berry, and the barbs of wood or metal. A loop of cord attached to the spear is held in the left hand.

A surf net is used by these Indians to catch candle fish and smelt. As the surf rolls in the Indian runs rapidly forward and, bending down, passes the net under the comb of the breaker, often capturing at once as many as an ordinary water bucket will hold. The handle of the surf net is six feet long, mouth of the net four feet by eighteen inches and depth about three feet. The Indian holds the bottom of the net drawn back under the handle until he thrusts it into the water, when he lets the point fall. Another net used for catching the small Quinaielt salmon on the river has a handle 14 feet long, a mouth one by five feet and a depth of four feet. Formerly the twine used in weaving these nets was made by the Indians from the fiber of the common nettle, but now seine twine is used.

See a Man by Telephone.

A reporter asked Mr. Edison if it was true that he had invented a machine by the aid of which a man in New York would be able to see everything that his wife was doing in Paris.

"I don't know," said Mr. Edison, laughing, "that that would be a real benefit to humanity. The women certainly would protest. Devices for Catching Fish in India.

In India the natives use several devices for trapping fish. A simple one is merely a funnel-shaped basket or net, which is hung in a stream or cascade and catches all the fish that may come down. A long, slender, cone-shaped trap is used in the long grass of marshes to catch fish that have a habit of seeking places of concealment from their enemies. These fish seek safety by swimming into holes. The cone-shaped trap is formed of little rods or branches of wood with thorns upon it. The fish pushes as far as it can toward the point of the cone. When it tries to back out the thorns catch it and hold it.—Washington Star.

Dwarfed for Life by Cold.

There is rather a peculiar case at the city orphan asylum. This is a colored girl of eighteen years. In infancy she was abused by her parents, and was finally thrown into a snow-bank one night. She was found and taken to the asylum, and, though nearly dead, was so carefully treated that she lived. But the brutal treatment checked her growth, and she is now no larger than a child of seven years.—New Haven Palladium.

Mother and Child.

"Where is the girl that you were?" said the child.
And the mother smiled back to her lifted eyes.
"She lives where the faded violets go,
And the old sun shines in the skies!"
"Where last year's birds sing last year's songs?"
She caught at the fancy, as children will.
"But if you should meet with the girl that you were,
Do you think you would know her still?"
"I remember her eyes and her waving hair;
I see them now as I look at you.
My little daughter, when one dream dies,
Another sometimes comes true!"
"Mothers are better than girls, I think;
They wipe your tears, and find out the pain,
And smile when you smile.—Pray do not go back
If you have the chance again?"
"Ah! there is no fear of that, my sweet.
A mother for evermore and a day
I shall be. We will let the girl that I was
With your faded violets stay."

As I behold, gleaming in radiance rare,
This single thread of rubiated hair,
Imbedded in the butter!

Paris By Panorama.

The latest development of the panoramic art is to be seen just now, along with other wonders, at Paris. Patriotism has inspired some enterprising Gaul with the very happy thought of seizing the present opportunity for interesting his countrymen and women and the whole world in the story of Joan of Arc. He has accordingly had painted and is now exhibiting a colossal and beautiful panorama of the life of the Maid of Orleans in several scenes. Realism is, of course, to the fore; and during the battle scenes before Orleans the peal of trumpets is heard, while the painting of the groups of figures in the coronation scene at Rheims, and in other episodes, is said to be marvellously life-like. This panorama should by rights be one of the greatest "draws" of the whole exhibition, as, if it does nothing else, it affords an agreeable way of learning the chief facts in the life of a great historical character.

THE ELIZABETH CITY FAIR.

The Elizabeth City Fair is in just the time of year when farmers and their families can best leave the farm and its business for a few days. The grounds are simple, pleasant and healthy. It will be a good place to meet the best farmers and stock raisers as well as to compare the efficency of agricultural implements.

Then, too, the history, character and superior merits of each breed of hogs, horses and cattle can be seen; and the various varieties of grain, vegetables and fruits can also be seen. It is not possible for any farmer, his wife, sons and daughters to have a better schooling in so short a time as a few days at the Elizabeth City Fair.

The Elizabeth City Fair is now the leading Fair of Eastern North Carolina. This year it will be big with possibilities of recreation and pleasure as well as sight-seeing and learning. Everybody come. Remember the days—October 23, 24 and 25th.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The general business outlook is encouraging. The fall trade is opening nicely. There is none of that uncertainty that hedged about the business situation a year ago, when it was a debatable question whether the people, misled by demagogues and Free Trade visionaries, would not deal a terrible blow at our industries and consequently to all kinds of business by electing a Congress pledged to the Cobden Club idea. That danger is happily passed, and trade moves actively in its accustomed channels with that confidence which only stability brings.

LEARN A TRADE.

Only nine out of more than one thousand convicts in a Pennsylvania penetentiary are bred mechanics. A stronger proof that idleness is the fundamental and greatest cause of crime could scarcely be furnished. Every boy who exhibits no marked fitness for a professional life should be compelled to learn a useful trade as soon as his common school education is finished, and parents who fail to compel their children to learn that which will make them useful and respected citizens openly encourages them to enter upon a life of idleness and crime.

Within thirteen months the Government has purchased and retired $199,000,000 of its bonded debt, paying $231,000,000 in doing so. That is, it paid about $32,000,000 premium. But the interest saved amounts to $76,000,000; hence the government is a clear gainer to the amount of $44,000,000. Good enough.

Japan has had a disaster as terrible as that of Johnstown. A river valley was dammed by a vast landslide from a mountain, forming an enormous lake, which overwhelmed many villages, and drowned some 10,000 persons. The result of disaster for 1889 will be a gloomy page in the world's history.

In the death of Wilkie Collins English literature sustains a real loss. He was not a Dickens or a Thackeray, to be sure, but his works undoubtedly deserve the great popularity which they have attained, and Wilkie Collins will long be held in grateful remembrance by the English-speaking race.

At the recent elections in Washington, Montana, North and South Dakota the Republicans have triumphed, not only giving us eight more United States Senators but increasing the party strength in the House of Representatives by five more votes. The new States have done nobly.

A year ago the Democrats were predicting that the country would be ruined if Harrison was elected. They are certainly not entitled to seats among the prophets. Everything is going along smoothly with the people, and nobody is worrying except Bourbon politicians.

The United States is getting together a fleet of war ships that would do credit to any nation in the world. A few more years of honest Republican rule will find us with a Navy that will be strong enough to insure peace for generations to come.

The increase in the value of Southern crops this year over 1888 is estimated at $152,000,000, though the last year's was the largest on record Assessed value of property will be $175,000,000 greater than last year.

The foreign commerce of the United States increased with rapid strides during the past year. The exports for July were 18 per cent greater than during than the corresponding month of 1888.

THE CAROLINIAN would like to know how many of its farmer readers keep an exact account of what each article of their farm costs. It is, and ought to be part of the education of boys on the farm. Addition, substraction and multiplication learned in the schools wants to be practically applied on the farm. And the same is the case of book-keeping, botany, chemistry and natural philosophy. Many of these things should be practically demonstrated in vacation, whether the boy be on the farm, in the shop or store.

The abstract education of the schools is frequently rendered dead and useless for want of practical application. And one of the ways for men and boys on the farms is to keep a strict book account of each article and department of the farm. And do not do this in a rough and careless way, but put in all the possible care and business talent one has, and improve that every day, In this way a bright boy or man will soon find themselves first class business men.

And bright, practical farmers are useful men, and there is always a demand for them among the best and most important stations in life. And a boy who begins the work in earnest by keeping account of every part of the farm, will soon love it and take pride in its accuracy and value of it, for reference and for guidance.

In over fifty years of observation the editor of the CAROLINIAN has never known a boy who determined to apply and profitably use what he was learning in the schools, but what has become a useful and eminent man. Fifty years ago, in the country, far from the influence of any town, he had some forty schoolmates in a country log school house. Among those who at that time manifested an earnest inclination to use and improve what they were learning at school, nearly all rose to more or less distinction—became successful in life.

It is estimated that with average weather this year's cotton crop will reach 8,000,000 bales, worth nearly $400,000,000

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, October 4, 1889.

Republicans here are greatly pleased with the result of the election in the four new States, although it is nothing more than was generally expected.

The members of the three American Congress left here yesterday on a special vestibule train for a tour of our principal cities as the guests of the United States. The Congress met Wednesday and organized by electing Secretary Blaine President and Ex-Senator Henderson, of Missouri, President pro tempore. Mr Blaine's speech of welcome was in his best vein. It is commended on all sides. A democrat Senator said to your correspondent: "If Blaine had always spoken like that he would have been President long ago. Every American should feel proud to know we have a man at the head of the State department capable of delivering such an address." Mr. Blaine is very deeply interested in this Congress, and he hopes that it will be followed by grand result's in a business way.

A long list of Presidential postmasters were appointed this week.

The public debt was reduced $13,685,094 during September. Lucky public. It is doubtful if our (your correspondents) private debts will get reduced that much in a life time.

Democrats are trying to make a sensation out of the fact that the U. S. S. Kearsage, which carried Minister Fred Douglass to Hayti from New York, was in charge of a new commander. Secretary Tracy sees nothing sensational in the matter at all. One naval officer was relieved and another put in command, as is constantly being done with other vessels.

The nearer the assembling of Congress gets the harder it is to get a Representative to say who he will support for Speaker. They all seem to be waiting for a change to make combinations, and after all it is only natural, for the supporters of the winning candidate always gets the best places on the Committees. The members and the humble gatherer of Washington news are just now in the same boat, trying to find out who is to be the winning candidate. It's a question that will not be decided until the republican House caucus meets.

The President will hold a special reception next Wednesday night to the Knight Templars attending the Conclave here and their ladies. Later in the week Mrs. Gen. Logan has tendered them a reception at her residence here.

The Cabinet resumed its regular semi-weekly meetings to-day with all the members present for the first time since July. The meeting was mostly given up to a discussion of matters relating to the Presidents message to Congress, a though something was also said about pension matters.

Representative Butterworth, who has gone to Ohio to take the stump for Gov. Forsker, says he intends to review his Congressional agitation looking towards the annexation of Canada, during the coming session of Congress. Mr. Butterworth firmly believes that the two countries are bound sooner or later to be joined and he wants to make it as soon as possible.

The Iowa Democrats have declared the protective system unconstitutional. This is a wicked slap at Th. Jefferson which his friends were not looking for- Next thing we know some free trader will be declaring the Constitution unconstitution, and then we'll be in a pretty fix.

[Regular Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, October 7, 1889.

The theatrical season is now in full blast and some of the most prominent players in the world are announced to appear before New York audiences in the near future. Among others, are the celebrated English actor and actress, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kendal, who open their first first American engagement at the Fifth Avenue to-night. For years these two have been particular favorites in London, where they have the reputation of being the most moral actors on the English stage. The prospects are that they will have a highly successfully season in America and especially in this city, where it must be confessed, that a little more of the moral kind of drama could be used to good advantage. Edwin Booth is also to be here shortly, and the great Salvini is booked to open up at Palmer's Theatre on Oct. 10. This is to be the latter's farewell tour in America, and those who fail to see him now will undoubtedly miss one of the greatest actors of our times.

The American Institute Fair was opened last week in the presence of six thousand people. This big show bears about the same relation to New Yorkers as the ordinary country fair does to the people of the surrounding neighborhood; but, of course, it is somewhat larger and lasts for a couple of months instead of three or four days. The building in which it is held occupies just one block at 63d st., between Second and Third Ave. It is crowded to the doors with the latest inventions in machinery, the choicest specimens of manufactured goods and with novelties of every description. Some of the exhibits this year are very attractive and many of the booths are elegantly fitted up. A leading paper company has a big house made entirely of paper. This and many other exhibits are calculated to attract special attention, but I regret that space forbids more One thing is apparent and that is that with such a creditable exhibition as this we will have something to console us even if we fail to catch the World's Fair.

LITERARY NOTICES.

BALD HEADED NOTABILITIES—One of the most interesting things we have ever read is Blakely Hall's contribution to FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER last week on "notable Bald-headed Men." Everyboky will want to read it. It is a double number containing twenty-four pages and over forty pictures, including a view of the World's Fair site in New York, the Quebec landslide, the great bicycle tournament, and the army rifle competition. It is a splendid number.

The October issue of the ECLECTIC now before us is full of variety and interest. The place of honor is given to "Gounod's Views on Art and Artists," notes of conversation full of brightness and suggestion. Canon Farrer, under the head of "Nether World," studies low life in London, the occasion being a book of the above-named title. Mr. R. S. Courtney contributes a very interesting sketch of Roger Bacon, a scientific and philosophical genius, hardly less great than his later namesake, Lord Bacon. A practical article of importance is that of Dr, Behrend in "The Diseases Caught from Butchers' Meat," and a paper which also appeals to the current interests of the time is Mr Paul Neumann's presentation of "The case against capital punishment" which is made with great ability. Two highly readable articles of travel will be found in "My First Visit to Z mire," and Prof. Freemans "Sicilian Travel 1878-1889." Walter Pater is in his best in the quaint and poetic essay "Hippolytus Unveiled" which will bear a double reading before its full pregnacy is realized. Mr Pater's style and method, perhaps like olives, "caviare to the vulgar" become very delightful with habit Mr. Grant Allen contributes a very bright article called "Tropical Education" and the sketch of the "Comedie Francaise" will attract all lovers of the drama. Principal Donaldson advances news in his "Position of Women Among the Early Christians" which if not absolutely new will yet prove startling to the average reader. The poems and short articles of the number are of a high grade and the whole table of contents will be very attractive.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus Ind, testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle cold sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, kidney or blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at A. Wadsworth's drug store.

The Annual Fair.

Rural Spirit.

Farmers have not as cordially devoted themselves to the success of annual fairs as their importance demands. The local annual fair is the farmer's home school, and should teach a valuable practical lesson The fair should be expected to bring together the best evidence of advancement of agriculture in its district. If the farmers in the district represented by the annual fair entered into it as a matter of personal interest, competing whenever an opportunity offered in prizes in those departments requiring improvement, stimulating much enthusiasm and will produce most unexpected progress,

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz" Thus write W. C. Hamrick & Co ,of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at A. Wadsworth's drug store.

The Wilson Advance announces that its town has seventy-six marriable girls who would make good wives for somebody. And yet, the editor of the Advance is a single man.

Webster's Weekly.

The efforts of the conspirators to ruin Dr. Grissom's character have fallen flat. He was tried and honorably acquitted and has retired to private life after giving his best years to his State. The people are proud of his career and will not suffer the wrong which has been done him to go unpunished. To show the esteem in which he is held in Raleigh we copy the following. They tell their own tale:

HIRAM LODGE, No. 40,
A. F. & A. M.
RALEIGH, N. C., Sept. 16, 1889.

At a regular communication of Hiram Lodge, No. 40, held Sept. 16, 1889, the Senior Warder presiding, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, our brother, Dr. Eugene Grisson, the Superintendent of the North Carolina Insane Asylum, has lately undergone a most thorough and exhaustive investigation at the hands of the Board of Directors of said institution, upon charges preferred against him by subordinate officers of the same; and whereas, in said investigation he was vindicated of every charge affecting his character as a man and official Now be it

Resolved, by Hiram Lodge, No. 40, that we extend to our brother our sympathies on account of the ordeal through which he has successfully passed, and we declare our unswerving confidence in his individual, professional and masonic character.

Resolved further, That the Secretary be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to the officers of the Grand Lodge and to the Worshipful Master, and brethren of each Subordinate Lodge of this Grand Jurisdiction.

E. B. THOMAS, Sec'y.

ASYLUM OF RALEIGH COMMANDERY No. 4
RALEIGH, N C., Sept. 9, 1889.

At a regular conclave of the Commandery, held Sept. 5, 1889, the Generalissimo presiding, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted:

Whereas Sir Knight Dr, Eugene Grisson, as Superintendent of the North Carolina Insane Asylum, has lately undergone a most thorough and exhaustive investigation at the hands of the Board of Directors of said Institution upon charges preferred against him by subordinate officers of the same; and whereas, in said investigation he was vindicated of every charge affecting his character as a man and official

Now be it resolved by Raleigh Commandery No. 4, K. T., That we extend to our brother our sympathies on account of the ordeal through which he has passed successfully, and we declare our unswerving confidence in his individual, professional and masonic character.

Resolved further, That the Recorder be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to the officers of the General Commandery and to the Eminent Commander of each subordinate Commandery of this Grand Jurisdiction.

A $20 A Day Man!

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for U. C. Allen & Co's albums, and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work. Others are doing quite as well. We have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business joins in making profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. WATER STREET

ELIZABETH, CITY N. C.

The North Carolinian.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1889.

☞Only two weeks to the Fair.

☞Let every man, woman and child talk and work for it.

☞M. N. Sawyer esq, of Camden, has been appointed Chief Marshal of the Elizabeth City Fair.

☞Mr. C. L. Weeks is erecting a steam grist and saw mill and cotton gin at Newbegun Creek.

☞Several farmers have joined and are erecting a Cotton Gin at the Old Fork School house in Providence.

☞The Pasquotank Farmers' Alliance held their regular quarterly meeting at the Court House on Friday.

☞The Edenton Fair comes off on the 28, 29, 30 and 31 of this month, the week following our Fair. May success attend them.

☞Captain Hussey, of the steamer Lizzie Burrus, will bring all articles and visitors to the Elizabeth City Fair and return them for one fare only. This applies to all landings of the steamer.

☞The time for "Coon and Possum" hunting is near. The "Club" is getting everything in readiness, when with ax and sharp eared dog, the active members will start for the "simmon" trees.

☞The new mail route between Rosedale and Elizabeth City went into effect on the 1st. It arrives from Rosedale every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 12 m, and leaves after arrival of Northern mail.

☞Misrepresentation reiterated, when uncontradicted, is apt to mislead some people. From certain inquiries made, the CAROLINIAN finds this is the case in relation to the FAIR question. There are those who are under the impression that the Elizabeth City Fair was started to antagonize the Albemarle Park Association, when it is a matter of history that the latter was not formed until after the former had already held a Fair! And the record shows that the leading spirit of the latter was an officer of and took a part in directing the management of the former during its first year!

——People are liable to forget. The Park was publicly dedicated, as "Creecy Park," on the 19th day of August 1885. The speakers were Col. R. B. Creecy, Capt. C. W. Grandy, J. W. Albertson Jr., and the editor of the CAROLINIAN. Not a word was said in reference to a Fair. Not until in the following spring was the matter of a Fair actively agitated. After several public meetings, stock was subscribed. At a meeting of the stockholders held on the 15 of April 1886, W. J. Griffin, C. W. Grandy and C. H. Robinson were appointed a committee on Charter and By-Laws. Their report was adopted at a meeting held on the 19th, when an organization was effected by electing the following officers: Col. R. B. Creecy, President; C. W. Grandy, Vice President; J. W. Albertson jr., Secretary; Thos. R. Mann, Treasurer, and D. B. Bradford, C. H. Robinson, E. F. Lamb, F. F. CAHOON and Dr. P. John, Directors. A committee on location of grounds was appointed. They reported that the only offer made was one in writing from the owners of "Creecy Park"—to lease the same for holding the annual Fairs, but reserving "the exclusive privilege of the restaurant, sale of lemonade, soda water, ice cream, confectionaries, tobacco, cigars, etc," and also "reserving to themselves the use of the grounds and buildings thereon and those that may be erected, whenever the same is not used." The stockholders did not deem it expedient to invest money in buildings, fences, track, etc., on such conditions, and ordered the Board of Directors to take charge of the matter. After examining several sites, they reported in favor of purchasing the present one, both because it was near the City and on the railroad. The report was adopted and they were directed to clear and fence the grounds, erect buildings, make a track, etc, in time for a Fair to be held on the 3, 4 and 5 of November, 1886. All this was done, and the Fair, as well as the two succeeding ones, were successful. There are 49 shares of stock of $50 each, owned by 30 stockholders, embracing farmers, mechanics, manufacturers, merchants, fishermen, steamboatmen and others.

——As to the "Albemarle Park Association," it was not organized until the 28th of July 1887—fifteen months after the Elizabeth City Fair, and its first exhibition is yet to be held. Is comment needed? And as to "antagonism," isn't the boot entirely on the other leg?

——With this brief statement of facts, verified by the records, we leave the matter with the fair-minded people, believing that all who feel an interest in having a permanent annual Fair in this locality will feel inclined to sustain, by their influence and patronage, the one already established.

☞Cotton picking has commenced.

☞Farmers are beginning to gather their corn.

——Fowler & Co., are "on the sod" as usual, with a splendid stock of fall and winter goods.

☞The Washington Gazette says: "Twenty-three prisoners in the coop. Acquisitions almost daily."

——A double-seated, second hand carriage, for either one of two horses, for sale at a nominal price. Call at this office.

☞A rejected suitor may be said to be suffering from heart failure on the part of the girl.

——Two nice, airy front rooms in the 2nd story of the CAROLINIAN Building for rent.

☞The interest in the Elizabeth City Fair still increases. Reports from all sections are encouraging.

——Examine Moses Weisels stock of Parasols and Umbrellas before buying

☞Put in wood and coal. Have your thick clothes overhauled, for now is the accepted time, and the future is not to be trusted.

——Wise men follow the star that lead to Moses Weisels store.

☞It is queer, isn't it, how one's physical condition determines the outlook. Mentally and morally a man may be all righ, but if he has a headache, or cholic, things somehow or another look differently, don't they?

☞Don't be misled or confused about dates. The Elizabeth City Fair, at the old place on the railroad, comes off on October 23, 24 and 25. The grounds have been enlarged, new buildings erected and other substantial improvements made.

——There was a young woman named Fleet who had bunions all over her feet When she heard the glad news of well fittin shoes, she tumbled right off of her seat. Shoes for all at Moses Weisel's ☞Horticulture has been termed the "poetry of agriculture." May we not call Flora culture the "poetry of gardening?" Who can estimate the value of flowers to the universal heart of humanity? Flowers give expression to the affections and emotions which words cannot express. Every child loves flowers. On every occasion, from the cradle to the grave, flowers are the symbols of our best affections and religious devotions.

——Two second hand Sitting Room Stoves for sale, very cheap. Call at this office.

☞The Elizabeth City Fair was organized April 21, 1886. The site decided on was selected because, in addition to being near the City, it was on the railroad. Three successful Fairs have been held, and the Managers, with their experience, feel prepared to make improvements—to promise that this year's Exhibition will eclipse the previous ones.

"It will be the place for one and for all,
There'll be pleasure for the large and fun for the small;
There'll be mirth for the young and jor for the old,
The half you can see there could never be told,"

——Big shoes, little shoes, coarse shoes, fine shoes, all fresh from the factory at Fowler & Co's.

☞"Inquirer" asks: "How many Army officers are on the retired list what is the number of each rank, and what is the pay of these retired officers?" The CAROLINIAN replies: Gen. Sherman is retired on full pay, $13,000 per annum. The other retired officers are as follows: Major Generals, 5, pay $5,625 each per annum. Brigadier Generals, 27, pay $4 125 each; Colonels, 85, pay $3,375 each; Lieutenant Colonels, 28, pay $3,000 each; Majors, 54, pay 2,825 per annum.

——NO MONEY IN IT.—Said an old citizen lately: "I've quit doing my trading with the stores where they put it on and take it off. It makes you feel good at first to get a reduction when you buy, but when you find that though you've got so much taken off you've paid more than the first price asked at some other store, it makes you sick. There's no money in that for me. I'm going in for Robinson & Co's. store and a straight one price deal, hereafter."

☞Those who attended the Elizabeth City Fair during past years will hardly know the grounds and surroundings on visiting them this time, as great improvements have been made. The grounds have been enlarged and the track changed, properly graded and put in splendid condition; the Main Building has been covered with water proof material, making all articles placed on exhibition absolutely secure from the weather; the pretty shady grove between the Main Building and the Track is being supplied with comfortable seats for the free accommodation of visitors; a large Grand Stand, with backs to seats, capable of seating 800 persons, has been built immediately opposite the Judges' Stand; a good sized building, with neat ante-room, has been erected especially for the ladies, and other things are being done to make everything neat, attractive and pleasant.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my medicine FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and postoffice address. Respectfully, T. A. Slocum, M. C. 181 Pearl St., New York.

☞The sorghum mills are in active operation and the sweet cane juice is flowing freely.

☞If you are going to help a man do it right off. Promised help loses one-half its aroma by evaporation.

☞If you like the CAROLINIAN speak of it to your neighbor and ask him to subscribe. Only $1.50 a year.

☞Some people are not large enough for the place they fill. You cannot fill a quart measure with a pint of anything.

☞Everywhere the people are now talking about the Elizabeth City Fair. What a crowd will be in attendance!

☞Miss Pauline Riddick, a much esteemed young lady residing in the lower end of this county, died on Friday last.

☞"A Reader" asks: "What is the language used in Brazil?" Principally Portuguese, with a sprinkling of Spanish.

☞Two of the crew of the sloop-yacht Plymouth were drowned yesterday. We learn that they were wrecking at the time of the accident.

☞Said a gentleman who has been through parts of this end of the District: "I verily believe that the Elizabeth City Fair of 1889 will be the most interesting and best ever held."

☞There being a large new dining hall, 38x15 feet, and other pleasant rooms adapted for confectionary stands, etc, erected on the Elizabeth City Fair Grounds, offers for privileges will now be received.

☞To aid and abet the farmers the Elizabeth City Fair was instituted. Therefore, let every farmer in this and adjoining counties make a committee of one of himself and go earnestly to work to compass the success of the Exhibition to be held this year, beginning two weeks from to-day.

☞How often we are reminded of the wise saying of Lavator: "What a vast deal of time and ease that man gains who is not troubled with the spirit of impertinent curiosity about others; who lets his neighbor's thoughts and behavior alone; who confines his inspections to himself, and cares chiefly for his own duty and conscience."

LOCAL MENTION

'Raw for the oyster.—The Tank Road Company have re-laid the switch at the Elizabeth City Fair Ground station.—Allen's Cotton Gin will be operated this season by Mr. George Beveridge.—Saturday being a Hebrew holiday, was rigidly observed by our citizen Jews.—

"Tasted sweets may clog the palate,
And its keen edge impair,"
This can never be recorded
Of the Elizabeth City Fair.

—A Congo river African, named Banda Kinker, lectured at the Court House on Thursday night.—The Finance Committee have been at work on the accounts of the late Sheriff.—Trim S. White has a splendid team, really the finest in this section.—"Meet me on the corner to-nite," he wrote, "and do not fale." And she answered him, "there is no such word as 'fale'."—The work of grading the Track of the Elizabeth City Fair was done by Mr. Joseph Pritchard. He is an expert in all such work, always doing a good job.—Mr. Geo Lettord, agent for Dr. Bucklin, of Chicago, gave us a call the other day.—The moonlight nights of the past week have been beautiful.—Rev. L. L. Williams, the new Rector of the Episcopal Church, officiated on Sunday. He is a young man of ability.—It is said "the longest pole knocks off the persimmons." On the first day of the Elizabeth City Fair the fastest picker will get the potatoes.—The work on the new pier is now in active progress.—The street from Poindexter Creek bridge to the Depot needs repairing.—New corn is coming in. Price 40 cents a bushel.—Zimmerman's wharf is about filled in and will be a valuable property.—All the mills are very busy.—Several equestrian Knights are preparing for the Tournament at the Fair on the 24th.—The local circulation of the CAROLINIAN is still on the increase.—Every mechanic appears to have plenty to do now. Encouraging.—We acknowledge a social call from Rev. Mr. Williams, the new Episcopal minister. We hope he will drop in again and often.—Work is in active progress enlarging and repairing the Colored Methodist church.—Lieut. Pailing's family, wife and child, arrived on Monday.—Mrs. A. S. N at his returned from Baltimore with a large stock of millinery goods.—The Roadvine & Humphrey large planing mill will start up to-day.—A protracted meeting is now in progress at the Methodist Church.—The windows for the Methodist Church have been received and will be put in in a few days.—Mrs. Briggs, of Raleigh, is visiting her daughter Mrs. Aydlett.—Jacob Salomonsky has returned with a superb stock of clothing, dress goods, etc, and at prices surprisingly low.—Heavy frosts the past two nights.

A CARD.

CAMDEN C. H., N. C., Oct. 5, '89

Editor CAROLINIAN:

I see by an article in the Falcon of the 4th inst, that our mountain (about the removal of the P. O.) has conceived and brought forth "a mouse" in the shape of said article. Like most of the reports and efforts made to prevent the removal it was conceived in hatred to the Republican party and its members and not for the great love of the "up county citizens," many of whom have told me they cared very little about the removal and some rather it was at the station.

The assertion that I bought my appointment by a subscription to the NORTH CAROLINIAN I pronounce a base fabrication, well in keeping with other reports in circulation here. I suppose the writer was compelled to have some one on whom to spit his venom and made his selections accordingly.

A TERRIBLE COLLISION.

Frightful Accident on the New York Central Railroad.

One Section of an Express Train Plunges Into the Other.

A terrible accident occurred on the New York Central road at 11:40 o'clock, a few nights ago, two miles east of Palatine Bridge, N. Y. The first section of the St. Louis express, which left New York at 6 o'clock P. M., had broken down, an accident having happened to the steam chest, when the second section, which was composed of eight vestibule sleeping coaches, drawn by sixty-ton engine No. 683, in charge of William Horth, and running at the rate of thirty miles an hour, dashed into it.

The first section was made up of Engine 744 Engineer Weeks and Conductor Abell, a baggage, mail, and express car, three passenger coaches, which were packed with people, one Wagner sleeper, and two private coaches.

The rear private coach, the Kankakee, telescoped the Wagner car of the first section which was just ahead of it, to half its distance. The only damage caused to the ordinary passenger cars, which were between the sleepers and the locomotive, was in the smashing of windows and lamps.

After the crash the second section withdrew from the first section, but left a hole in the rear portion of the Kankakee big enough to place a boiler in. The first, third, and fourth tracks were littered with wreckage.

Conductor Abel said his rear brakeman was sent back, but Conductor Horth, who was very badly hurt, said that he did not see him, and the first he saw were the lights on the train.

When the crash came the New York Times' correspondent was asleep in the coach next ahead of the sleeper of the first section. Every seat in the car was taken. One-half of the passengers were women. They made a wild break for the door, but were deterred from jumping out in the darkness by the cooler-headed passengers.

The wreck could not have occurred in a more unfavorable place. On the left, in the pitchy darkness, and fifty feet below, was the roaring Mohawk.

Not a light could be seen except those in the coaches. The lights in the sleepers had all been extinguished. One-half of the passengers were awakened from a sound sleep to find themselves wrapped in gloom. For a while the people were too dazed to do anything. The train men were mute and reserved as usual under such circumstances.

The first thing that the correspondent did was to walk back to see if the rear lights of the first section were all right and the rear brakeman was in his place. Ten feet of the rear car had been cut away by the towering engine, which was hissing in the darkness fifty feet distant. Two of the passengers had got a light, and were searching about in the rain for the cause of the disaster.

The engine, No. 683, of the second section, one of the latest and heaviest engines on the road was wrecked beyond redemption. The roof of the express car immediately behind it had sprung through the sills and to the ground. The fireman, Henry Anderson, had jumped and escaped uninjured. Beyond this the second section was not damaged at all, the heavy vestibule sleepers protecting it from telescoping.

It was the three rear heavy Wagner sleeping and private coaches of the first section that had sustained the shock and saved their three passenger coaches filled with men, women and children from destruction.

There was not a surgeon or a doctor on the train, and it was with the greatest difficulty that stimulants were procured for the wounded. It was not till a large bonfire was built on the north side of the track that a realizing sense of the disaster was obtained. Already six wounded passengers, including one lady, had been taken from the Wagner sleeping car.

It was a pitiable sight to see the passengers chased, with fear stamped in their faces, groping their way from the sleeping car. Gentle hands were ready to lead them out of it, and after the first terror of the shock had passed away the women in the coaches fell to and worked as only women in an emergency can.

It was just a miracle that the disaster was not rendered tenfold more terrible. Within five minutes after the crash the meat express came tearing along on the fourth track at the rate of thirty miles an hour. It was stopped just in time, else it would have dashed into the debris of the wreck.

Axes and saws were procured and willing hands set to work to cut away the sides of the cars that were telescoped. Among the first bodies recovered from the ruins, which caught fire and burned rapidly, were those of three men and one woman.

Later Details.

That the collision was not attended by a much greater loss of life is surprising to any one visiting the scene of the accident. That it was not more disastrous is due entirely to the massive and solidly-built car of President Ledyard, of the Michigan Central Road, which was at the rear end of the first section and received the full force of the shock.

The second section escaped with very little injury. Not one of the vestibule sleepers was damaged a dollar's worth, and not a passenger in them was injured. But the engine was smashed beyond repair. The smoke-stack lay by the track, the headlight was gone, the steamchests and cylinders were torn apart, the pilot was knocked into kindling wood, the framework around the boiler was ripped open, the cab was demolished, and the driving rods were broken. The tender had gone clean through a Boston and Albany baggage car whose roof and sides were broken. The baggagemaster, Egbert Willcox, of Syracuse, had a miraculous escape. "I was sound asleep when the collision occurred," he said, "and when I awoke I found myself sitting on top of the tender with my head touching the roof of my own car. The Lord only knows how I got there."

Willcox was cut about the body, and the top of his head was gashed open. He finally crawled down and out through the door. He then saw the fireman, John Slater, on the roof of the baggage car over the tender, and helped him down. Slater was unable to tell how it was he got up there, but it seems to prove that he remained at his post. He himself says he was firing, when he heard an exclamation from his engineer, who at the moment shut off steam, reversed his engine, and applied the air brakes. The next thing Slater knew he was being helped to the ground by Willcox.

Horth, the engineer, was found alongside of the track. Both of his legs were broken. Slater thinks Horth jumped from the cab, but the engineer adhered to the statement that he was forced through the cab window by the concussion. He was taken to his home in Albany, in the first Atlantic express, which came along within half an hour after the disaster occurred.

One of the ladies in the car had been tendered a lower berth by the Rev. Mr. DeVeuve, of Dayton, Ohio, in exchange for an upper one which she disliked, but rather than put the gentleman to any inconvenience she declined his offer. Mr. De Veuve was killed instantly, and she escaped with nothing more than the shock.

The list of casualities by the accident figures up four dead and eleven severely injured.

FEARFUL EXPLOSIONS.

Men Killed and Injured in a Powder Mill and a Foundry.

A terrible explosion has taken place at Laflin & Rand's powder works at Becksville, Penn., resulting in the instant and horrible death of three men and the injuring of six others.

The concussion of the explosion was felt five miles away. Four buildings were utterly demolished and nearly all the glass in the village was smashed.

The men who were killed were all literally blown to atoms, and their remains had to be gathered up in bags and baskets. Portions of the limbs were hurled a hundred yards away from the factory.

The glazing mill, corning mill, powder house and another building belonging to the factory were blown to atoms and portions of the building were hurled 150 feet into the air, and parts of the quivering remains of the unfortunates came down in the shower of the fragments that fell over an area of several squares about the wreck and ruins.

The explosion is believed to have been caused by a tack lying on the floor, which communicated a spark to the powder.

An explosion occurred at Carnegie's Edgar Thomson Steel Works, at Braddock, Penn. Captain W. R. Jones, general manager of the immense steel works, and a number of workmen were seriously and some fatally burned. Furnace C, one of the largest of the blast furnaces, gave way at the bottom, and in an instant flames shot forth, and the hot metal exploded and fell like sheets of water. Tons of the molten metal poured out of the furnace, and that any person near the furnace escaped instant death seems remarkable. Some of the men were so severely burned that their flesh peeled off with their clothes.

Captain Jones is well known throughout the United States and Europe wherever iron and steel are manufactured. It was he who took 300 men to Johnstown at his own expense, two days after the flood, and remained there for a couple of weeks directing the work of rescue. He is sixty years of age.
